

Part 4: Integrated movie

In a Word Document, describe 4 lessons that you could use videos as an integrated component. Make sure you explain what the video is about and how it is being used and who is creating it. For example, if the students are creating it as a means of assessment, you need to explain that o This needs to be saved in your folder and the PDF needs to be posted on your website. Next to the link, put something to the effect: These are some examples of how I plan to use videos in my classroom

1. Students by allowing them to create a class movie summarizing a recent field trip with images and voiceovers recorded by the students. This would be a great product to feature on a teacher blog page to share with parents who were unable to attend the field trip.
2. Students can also use iMovie for digital storytelling. They can work in small groups to write a script, and tell their story though images, video, audio, and music. This activity could be used as a culminating activity after a study of the fairy tale genre or as students are exploring the use of conflict as a literary element. Digital storytelling can also be used to bring students' interests and cultures into the classroom while encouraging them to write nonfiction text. Students can create a digital story that tells about their family's holiday traditions, their favorite college football team, or their rock collection.
3. They can use iMovie trailers to create simple book trailers advertising the book to their peers. What were the highlights? Why do they recommend it to others? Make sure they do not spoil the ending! Book trailers can also be used to check their comprehension. Do they understand the plot structure? Are they able to depict their visualizations of actions and characters to their peers?
4. Students can record presentations or reports. Instead of having students get up in front of the class and talk about the cuisine of Argentina with a poster or PowerPoint, they can use images to create a travel commercial encouraging peers to visit Argentina and taste the cuisine firsthand.
