Baylee Nahlen

11/13/18

Other ways to use iMovie

I could use iMovie to record the progress of something. For example, if the class has a plant that we are tracking the growth of for the month I could record the plant a few seconds each day and at the end of the month we could create a movie and watch how the plant grew.

I could use iMovie to record how to videos to show students how to make something. For crafts or other projects, I could record myself doing it to show the students in class. This way while I am showing the video, I could also be walking around helping students.

I could use iMovie to provide out of school experiences. For snow days I could record myself teaching and send it to students to watch. I could even make iMovie's that help students work and understand certain concepts that they could watch and refer to if they were trying to do homework and got stuck.

I could use iMovie to record book reports the students do in class. This could be beneficial for other students who want to read a book but can't remember what it was about or how other students felt about the book. This will also help me to watch videos to see how students progress in their speaking skills while doing book talks.