Philosophy of Education

My philosophy of education is that all children should be in a classroom where they feel like they are in a safe, caring, and educational environment. The students should be able to speak their minds, blossom, and grow. It is my job to create this type of environment for my students so that they can reach their full potential and accomplish their goals. I will create an environment where my students can talk to me about anything, they can share their ideas with the class, and they can take a chance at certain things. There are three elements that I feel are helpful to establish such an environment, (1) the teachers role is to know what's going on with a student. (2) Student's need to have hands-on activities. (3)Student's should have classroom jobs.

When the teacher's role is to know what' s going on with the student's, providing them access to talk to the teacher about anything, the student's become more comfortable in the classroom and become more open to everyone. If student's have problems at home or are going through other personal problems, teachers should provide solutions like having morning meetings or one on one sessions. For student's to be able to come in in the morning and talk to a teacher and the teacher be them for them, lets them know that they are in a caring environment and they can come to you at all times. Providing students a caring environment can improve their skills in a classroom because when they don't feel like they are in a caring environment they start to slack off and they don't do as well, but if you show them that you care and that you'll be there for them then they will improve.

Student's should be provided hands-on activities. Providing students with hands-on activities allows them to blossom out and become a leader. When student's do hands-on activities, it allows them to become more active in class because the more you do hands-on things the more you'll be able to show your skills to their classmates and they blossom out and grow and their skills improve as well. Providing them with that reinforces the lessons the teachers provide, and it allows their knowledge to grow.

Helping students have respect for themselves, other, and their environments teaches them to have a good discipline. Having classroom jobs is a way to have great discipline. Having classroom jobs give the children the opportunities to be responsible and become more comfortable with the classroom environment and the people in the classroom. I feel that the students will have better respect for their teachers and their classmates if they have a job in the class, because they might be responsible to get things for everyone or have to do something for the teacher.

For me, teaching provides the opportunity to help students grow, build, and succeed. One of my goals for when I become a teacher is to make sure my classroom is a loving and caring environment, and I want to share with them my love for teaching them new things. It's important for student to go to a classroom where they learn a lot and obtain new knowledge, but it's also important for them to have a loving, caring, growing, and safe environment so that they can open up and feel comfortable when they come to class, and I hope to achieve these goals. This is my philosophy of education.
