

iMovie Synopsis and How It Can Be Used

How it can be used in the classroom:

1. The teacher could use it to create presentations that will capture the student's attention. They will probably be more likely to learn the material if it is in more of a movie form.
2. The students could create video reports. Instead of having them write long essays, you could give them a break and have them present the material in an iMovie form.
3. Students could recreate books and poems and create an iMovie. They could create a play in a way, to show they understood the plot of the story.
4. The teacher could use iMovie to make short videos of the students doing activities throughout the year. At the end of the year, the teacher could create a movie out of all the projects they did and present it to administration and parents. It would be a good thing to share that parents and students can have to remember the school year by.
5. iMovie would be a good tool to use when the students are trying to get word out to the community about something. They could create a short movie about the topic and post it on social media for parents and community members to watch.

Synopsis:

My iMovie is based off my favorite book. Instead of doing a normal book talk. The students will take all the components of a book talk and create a short movie out of them. I also think students could present books to the class that they have read in their reading circles. So, this could be a group project or and individual project.
