By: Ms. Jones

On a cold winter December morning, Jacob and Jagger were born. Growing up, the twins loved to do everything together. It was almost impossible to separate them.

On the twins fifth birthday, there was conflict. Jacob wanted a Blippi birthday party and Jagger wanted a superhero birthday party. Since the twin's birthday are on the same day, mom made the boys compromise on one theme.

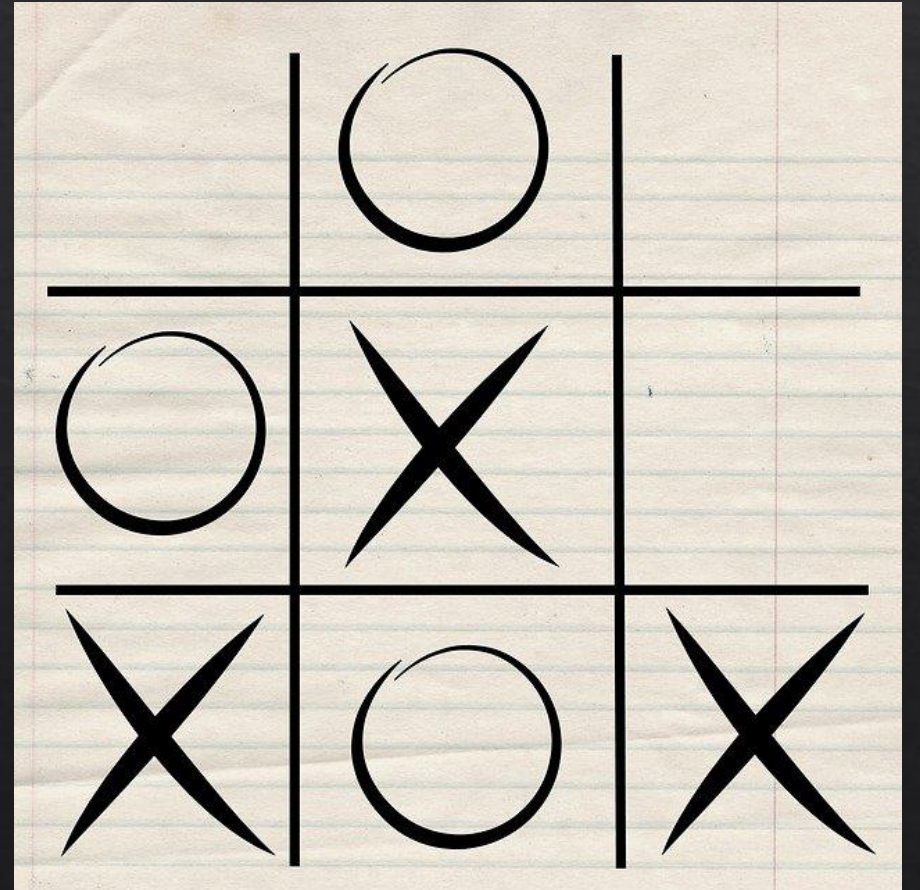

Jacob fought hard for the Blippi themed birthday party. While on the other hand, Jagger fought hard for the superhero themed birthday party. The twins could not settle on one decision so they decided to play games.

The first game the twin's played was rock, paper, scissors. Jagger won best of three. Jacob cried and cried because he did not want a superhero themed. Jagger felt compelled and offered to play Jacob in another game. Jacob chose tic-tack-toe.

As the boys are playing tic-tack-toe, Jacob becomes upset. He is realizing that Jagger is winning again. He did not want to have a superhero birthday and he was determined to win. So while Jagger was not looking, he decided to do something very sneaky.

While Jagger was not looking, Jacob hurried up and wrote another “O” in so he could win. One Jagger realizes this, he is not happy. He screams at Jacob at the top of his lungs, “WE ARE HAVING A SUPERHERO BIRTHDAY!” Jacob yells back, “NO WE ARE NOT! I WON!”

The twins start to fight and tussle. They knock over the toys and bookshelves in their room. Mom walks in the room and is distraught by what she sees. She sits the twins down and explain that the type of behavior they are showing is not okay. She puts them in time out and tells them the birthday party is canceled.

As the boys are sitting in time out, Jagger burst into tears. He wanted his superhero party badly. This results in Jacob crying because although he wants his Blippi themed party, he hates to see his brother cry. Jacob and Jagger begin to talk and come up with the best idea ever.

After ten minutes, mom comes back into the room to see the boys laughing and talking. The twins explain that they want to have a Blippi superhero themed party. Mom was thrilled with joy that the boys were able to settle their differences and find a common ground. Mom helps the boys plan their party.

One the day of the party, the boys were so excited to show all their friends their awesome party. Their friends start to show up and are mesmerized by the theme. Jacob, Jagger and their friends run around in the yard, sing happy birthday, eat cake, and opened presents. To end the perfect birthday, mom surprised the twins with a special Blippi superhero themed YouTube video that was made especially for them.
