

For my video that I created to go along with my lesson plan, I used iMovie. I chose to use iMovie because I have used it before so I was familiar with how to work the program and I knew that I could complete the assignment effectively without having to stress about the program too much. I would use this program again if necessary. I liked that it was user friendly, but I did not like the limited options that I had. I felt like I did not have very much control over the program.

Four ways that I could use video in my classroom include:

- To teach new material through demonstrations that I may not be able to do in the classroom
- To provide out of class support on topics that will be accessible to students outside of school
- To give students a new visual perspective on a particular topic
- For review before assessment
