Plagiarism

Plagiarism is (defined by Merriam-Webster Online) “to steal or pass off (the ideas or words of another) as one’s own; use without crediting the source. For example, if you were to take a cookie from the cookie jar at home without telling anyone, this would be similar to plagiarism. Sometimes, you can use a simple phrase (or cookies) and it can pass by without Ms. Miller knowing. However, you know that stealing is wrong and there will be consequences if I plagiarize.

Copyright Information and Fair Use

Sharing, downloading, or copying any information that is not mine without the permission of the owner violates copyright laws. The rules stated above are ones that will eliminate and avoid the use of copyright infringement and fair use.

Consequences

1. I will receive a warning if I break any of these rules. If I still continue to break these rules, I will have a talk with Ms. Miller and explain why I am doing so. We will also discuss a plan to follow in order for me act better.
2. If my bad behavior is still continuing, then I will talk with Ms. Miller, my parent/guardian, and principal. I could potentially lose all of my privileges such as iPad usage, playground time, and center time.

Once I have proven that I can obey and be trusted, these privileges will be given back.

By signing below, I agree to follow the rules mentioned on page one and two of these documents.
